Introduction

If you are representing yourself, or you are an individual representing your business as a party on the case, you may apply for re:SearchNM access to view your court case and court documents online through the New Mexico Judiciary’s re:SearchNM database. Access to court records in re:SearchNM is a privilege conferred by the Supreme Court. Access will be granted only to applicants who qualify and who agree to the terms of use and non-disclosure set forth below.

Parties representing themselves in their court case will be given the same access to the online case records as an Attorney of Record on the case.

In this application we use the term Self-Represented Litigants (SRLs) to refer to people who are representing themselves, and individuals designated to represent their business. People representing themselves may also be referred to as Pro Se by court staff or in court documents.

Restrictions:

- If a Self-Represented Litigant retains an attorney at any point in the case, the attorney will then have access to the case in re:SearchNM on behalf of the SRL. As the SRL is no longer marked “Pro Se” on the case, they will no longer have access to that case in re:SearchNM.
- If a Self-Represented Litigant is an individual designated to represent a business, that person must be a party on the case and/or Doing Business As (DBA) the corporation. They must apply using their own email address. Some courts may require a business or corporation to retain an attorney.

Use of re:SearchNM for any purpose other than viewing individual electronic court records, including attempting to download multiple records, is strictly prohibited. Data use is subject to NMSA 1978, Section 14-3-15.1.

Application Process

To apply for SRL access to court case files on re:SearchNM, please complete this application document and sign the New Mexico Administrative Office of the Courts Terms of Use and Disclosure Agreement. You must submit your application and the Terms of Use and Disclosure Agreement via email to the New Mexico Administrative Office of the Courts Judicial Information Division (“JID”) at support@nmcourts.gov. Each re:SearchNM account is associated with the applicant’s email address, so each applicant must submit his or her own application using the applicant’s email address. You will be emailed confirmation that your application has been processed.
